Dear Dr. Mikulak,

On behalf of the Organizing Committee, I wish to express our pleasure at learning that you plan to attend the Conference on Policies for Chemical Weapons and Chemical Arms Control to be held at the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in Boston on January 21-22, 1977.

Following our recent telephone conversation, I am writing to confirm our understanding that you will contribute a paper for distribution to the participants in advance of the Conference. We would particularly value a paper that provides an analytical framework for considering the major U.S. policy options for lethal and incapacitating chemical weapons, especially in the context of European defense. The actual choice of topics and treatment will of course rest with you. However, you may wish to consider some or all of the following questions:

- . What are the attitudes of the major military powers toward chemical arms control and disarmament?
- . What benefits might be achieved by an international arms control agreement prohibiting the production and possession of lethal and incapacitating chemical weapons of war and allowing only defensive and protective equipment and preparations?
- . What risks are inherent in such an agreement?
- . To what extent is it likely that these risks can be reduced by appropriate unilateral and international measures?

The paper should be long enough to allow a clear presentation of the subject to readers generally familiar with defense and arms control matters but knowing little about chemical weapons and U.S. policy regarding chemical warfare. Approximately ten thousand words would not be too long, but you should be the judge. We hope to receive a copy by December 15. This would allow time for preliminary review and possible limited revision and for duplication and distribution before the Conference. The American Academy staff will retype the manuscript if necessary and distribute it to participants. The Conference is prepared to reimburse you for necessary secretarial costs and to provide an honorarium of $500.

For your information I enclose a list of acceptances received to date from other participants, including those who have also agreed to provide a paper.

Sincerely yours,

Matthew Meselson
