Dear Professor Meselson:

I am sending you today a chemical protective suit manufactured and packaged in conformance with military specifications. There is a slight defect, making this garment a second, but it should satisfy your purposes.

The mask and boots are in very limited supply as samples. I will send you a sample of each for your demonstration but must request that you return them. Please remind me toward the end of February and I will send you the mask and boots.

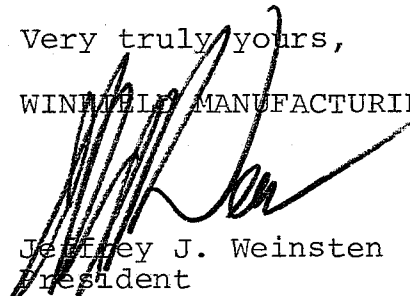

I appreciate the literature you sent. If any additional papers result from your work with the suit, I would very much appreciate your sending me a copy. As the major manufacturer of the suits in this country and as a concerned citizen, I have great interest in the entire subject.

I request that you do not use our company name in any way. The suit is a U.S. military specification garment which we manufacture but we are not responsible for the design or technical aspects. Furthermore, it is submitted to you as a favor and we wish to receive absolutely no publicity or mention whatsoever, either in your papers or lectures. (If, however, a substantial potential customer makes inquiries, tell him to call us.)

We are supplying the suit without cost in the hope that it will be of some use to you.

Very truly yours,
