Dear Professor Meselson:

This academic year I am hosting a series of dinners at which Harvard students can meet socially with professors. These dinners were given last year and were overwhelmingly successful. A list of the professors who have participated is enclosed. The dinners are given at my house, which is at One Frost Street in Porter Square, Cambridge.

If you have an evening free next year, we would be honored to have you (your spouse is also welcome). I can promise you good food, an attentive audience, and interesting conversation. In addition, we provide transportation to and from my house.

I will call you soon to see if you can come.

Sincerely yours,

James Mitchell
